From the Editor

It's been another one of those months where everything waited until the last moment. Facing a possible lay off, gave me a few free Fridays off to work on things. I was hoping to finish the Super Hots, but after accidentally CAing the hinge on the aileron made me have to run to the hobby shop for parts. That, plus the hinges I ordered, weren't the ones I received, so having to wait for snail mail to deliver the things I needed cut into building time.

Anyway, I spent so much time working on my model and trying to get minutes for the newsletter, this issue is later than I wanted. I do wish that, some of you would consider submitting articles for print. It makes trying to get the newsletter out in a timely manner easier on me. I appreciate Peter Caddick for the articles he's submitted. Let's face it, when you don't have the vast experience that some of you have, writing articles isn't easy.

With all that, I thought I'd do something different this month. About a year and a half ago, I bought a Honey Bee 2 electric heli. I bought the most expensive one because I thought, why buy a cheaper one and have to upgrade later, saving myself money.... Mistake.

I contacted the distributor and they told me I should have bought the cheaper model first because it was for beginners. They did however, send me a program called FMS to use to practice with. However, after two weeks of messing around with it, I couldn't get it to work, period!

I was at Winkies one day, and they had Real Flight G2 Lite. So, I ended up buying that to use to learn to fly my heli with. After months of practice, I gave up, sold the heli to some amish kid and put the program on ebay to recoup some of my losses. I hated the graphics and flying the simulator was more difficult because you couldn't see the plane and the ground to judge where you were.

I thought we'd have a poll on, 1) Do you have a flight simulator program (not including Microsoft Flight Simulator, or Combat Flight Simulator. 2) What kind do you have? FMS, Real Flight, ect. 3) What do you think about it, pro's and con's. And 4) Would you recommend it to someone?

Email me, write me or call (leave me a message if you must), before May 20th. I'll post the results in next months newsletter. Who knows, maybe there's a decent program out there we can use on a rainy day.
